April is Oral Health Month! First Birthday – First Dental Visit

Happy 1st Birthday Baby! Who's your dentist?

Hmmm...maybe not the top thing on a one year old's mind, but did you know that babies should see a dental health professional by age one? The Canadian Dental Association recommends that all children see a dental health professional by age one. This helps to spot potential problems early when treatment is easier. Baby teeth can decay quickly, and are very important for a child's speech and nutrition.

This first dental appointment can seem overwhelming to parents, especially if they have any anxiety surrounding the issue themselves. Having your little one see a dental professional early helps to develop a worry-free dental relationship, and you save money.

What can you expect at that first appointment? Baby will most likely be in your arms while the dentist or dental hygienist has a look in his or her mouth. They will lift up the lip to check the front teeth and look for any signs of decay. This is a great time to ask any questions you may have, such as how and when to clean baby's mouth, what are tooth-friendly snacks, and talk about fluoride. They may discuss how to reduce the risk of decay for your baby and, if needed, provide a quick and easy fluoride varnish.

Tooth decay is the second most common childhood disease. Seeking dental care early can prevent this problem and give your child a lifetime of healthy smiles. Call your dental provider today to book that first appointment.

The Health Unit offers free first visits for all children at any of our 6 clinic locations. Call 1-800-660-5853 to book, or go to www.healthunit.org/dental for more information on oral health.
